

Which Public Companies Do We Research? How Do We Choose?

On the next pages we list over 1,000 of more than 9,000 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests we filed on public companies since 2012. On this page we explain how we choose those companies to research and what's involved in doing so.

- Probes Reporter files about 2,500 individual Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests each year, primarily with the SEC.

We choose companies to research using screening methodology developed over time. That includes red flags that can make a company at risk of an SEC probe. We combine this with anticipated subscriber interest and specific requests made by our all-access clients to pick companies to research. Any company with securities of any kind registered for trading in the US is a candidate for us to research.

- Since June 2000, our FOIA requests have sought records on nearly 4,000 individual public companies. They span all market sectors and capitalizations.

It takes a serious commitment of resources to use the FOIA on your own as a research tool. One cannot simply send the SEC a list of companies and ask for all records on that list. You have to file an individual FOIA request for each company.

- Since 2000, we filed over 25,000 individual FOIA requests with the SEC (Yes, we counted. By March 2016, the exact number was 25,417).

You have to make sure you have the company's name correct, in the manner in which the SEC is likely to have it in their systems. Name changes, and M&A activity can easily throw-off your results.

- Doing it yourself, you'd have to track your FOIA requests from time you first file them, all the way through administrative appeals.

You also have to be comfortable with the possibility anyone could learn you filed a FOIA request.

- Public companies could easily find out you filed a FOIA request on them. Your competitors could too. With Probes Reporter, it's only our name that's on file.

In short, you must know what to ask for, on which companies, how often to ask, covering what time period, and how to interpret the wide array of responses you are likely to receive.

Probes Reporter does all of this for you.

Here are some other interesting items from our history of filing FOIA requests –

- We started out in 2000. We were previously known as SEC Insight / Disclosure Insight.
- We did not count the number of administrative appeals we've filed. It's easily well over one thousand.
- In October 2004, we filed litigation against the SEC for failure to comply with the FOIA.

Again, since 2000, we have filed over 25,000 requests on nearly 4,000 individual public companies. The listing on the following pages merely gives you a sense of some of those researched since 2012, when we became Probes Reporter.

Below are over 1,000 of the public companies on which we filed over 9,000 FOIA requests since 2012.
